The North reader is a free, lightweight and feature packed RSS and Atom newsreader for Windows Phone. It has an elegant UWP design, a simple yet clean user interface and a rich feature set. It is easy to add RSS feeds from your favorite websites and manage them. Apple nuked NPR, one of the nation's most important news sources just as the public is asking for more accountability in politics. When Apple recently killed off NPR's iPhone app, the national news media company's federal funding dropped over $2 million, and the White House banned it from using the White House address in all of its communications. But now, NPR is fighting back. Since NPR began in 1970, it has been fighting for public media to be free and independent of government, a stance that has paid off handsomely. The privately supported station, which is now listened to by nearly 200 million people a month, has a fervent following that President Obama chose to honor. In July, NPR's president, Vivian Schiller, told The New York Times, "In a number of ways we are kind of a super PAC of independent journalism."

The White House has been taking its fair share of hits after publication of The Washington Post's series The Hidden Cost of Watergate, but NPR suffered the most when it attacked the president for his alleged connections to Russia. Last year, the House Intelligence Committee announced it was investigating Russia's alleged meddling in the 2016 election, and the accusations came as there was evidence Russia had tried to meddle in the NPR story calling for a probe. That prompted reaction from President Obama. "They said I was involved in a conspiracy with Russians. They didn't say that I was involved in a conspiracy with (Putin). They just said that I was involved with Russians," he told NPR's Brian Lehrer in an interview. Lehrer pressed him on the issue, and he responded: "I was with Vladimir Putin twice. I was with him for an hour once, probably ten minutes, and then I had a much longer conversation. I don't think we had a whole lot to say to each other." This was the first time the president had been directly criticized by NPR in a long time, and it wasn't the last. In September, NPR published an editorial complaining that the FBI, CIA and the National Security Agency (NSA) were going too far with their surveillance. The commentary, published in USA Today, was titled, "Government secrecy is not your friend." Daily video game rumors were named gmal. It's a solid p2p messaging app, and one that you can use to chat with your friends with different privacy options. Gmal is a popular and well known p2p messaging application. It doesn't look as nice as some of the apps you've probably seen, but that doesn't bother me. It's more important that the application works, and that's why I'm going to talk about it today. Screenshots and features This messaging application has been around for a while, and you can't really get any better than this. However, what you can do with it is your choice, but there are some features that you can take advantage of to make things even more effective. The application is in no way very complex or difficult to use, and since it's pretty straightforward, there's really not much that you need to know. The best part about this application is that it's totally free to download and use, which is something you won't find in many other programs. Another nice thing about this program is that it's very easy to customize. The features aren't really hidden; you just have to know where to find them. What's New in the NorthReader?

If you are looking to get your daily dose of news, you might want to check out NorthReader. With this app you can easily add your favorite feeds and follow them using the application's quick and easy interface. Once you add a feed, it will display the headlines of your choice in a list and you can quickly switch between them with a button on the bottom of the screen. If you opt for reading the headlines, the details will be presented in another set of lists. You can then toggle between a simple and a more detailed view of each article to make sure you don't miss anything. The application also allows you to export feeds to XML format and import RSS feeds from other websites like Google Reader and Newsgator. However, you will have to export the entire feed (including the links and titles) and add them manually. The app also allows you to choose from a variety of themes and different fonts to give it a personalized look. While it comes with a variety of popular news sources, there's no option to import your own RSS feeds. The app is definitely a great tool for those who are looking for a simple way to follow their favorite news feeds without having to browse the Web. But despite it's clean interface and easy to use features, it lacks more features that would make it a winner among news readers. Get NorthReader You can download NorthReader from here. This way, I will always have the latest news articles from a source I trust. Doing otherwise would mean leaving that source's RSS feed on their website, and then having to "follow" the RSS feed on my blog, and then not getting the latest updates from their website. I doubt that they want me to keep "following" their RSS feed on my blog. The thing is, when
